Essay: "The experience of black people was that they were treated in their own country as if they were not Americans at all"

Reference: 1920 – 1930

Black people were first imported to America as slaves in the 17th century. In 1863 they gained freedom from slavery by the Emancipation Proclamation. However, for the next 70 years the black people were equally treated by all the responsible citizens of the United States?

The essay focuses mainly on the 1920 – 1930 period when America was a progressive nation and black Americans were a majority. It examines whether they were treated equally to the rest of the American population and seeks to find a reasonable conclusion.

Firstly, black Americans were not treated with equality in their country as they were segregated from "white" facilities and were denied an education. Negroes were not allowed to vote in numerous states, they were treated as separate "peoples" from white people, however their blood was kept separate by the Red Cross (until the 1950s) and they were not even allowed to drink out of the same water fountains white people drank from. The denial of education was a major reason black people "fell behind" which meant that black people were given the poorest educational standards and the lowest paid jobs. The Southern part of the USA were particularly segregated. In response, black people usually sat at the back, away from the white people. They also had to give up their seats for white people if there was not enough room. Black and white Americans were segregated in restaurants. At the time of the 1920s a blacklisted system where people were not permitted to work with or supply to black people and therefore were always white and usually worked in support to a black person. Discrimination between black and white people was prevalent in many areas, social classes were also segregated and even the capital, Washington DC, had strict segregation.

There were also laws in the south which prevented African-Americans from being treated equally as their white counterparts. These were the "Jim Crow" laws. "Jim Crow" was an African and laughing term – could be used as "jigger". These laws were to the segregation and legalised racism that blacks could be explained as well as their forced education.

When black people were permitted to go to school, it meant that they were being treated as Americans, which contradicted the statement that they were not. Nevertheless, this act of legalised racism: the soldiers were large in all-black units, black officers were not allowed to command the white troops and support their loyalty in the war. African-Americans were not given any military and still remained in poor and crowded areas in the "military barracks" where most white people progressed. During the Great Depression African-Americans suffered most in the struggle of their lives and the new unemployment. At the time, black
